THE MERGER OF THE UNIVERSITIES OF DURBAN-WESTVILLE AND NATAL

The Universities of Durban-Westville and Natal merged on 1 January 2004. This means that the university at which you have registered is the merged institution University of KwaZulu-Natal.

The merger of the two institutions is seen as an exciting opportunity to create a new, truly South African university which is committed to excellence in teaching and in research. The Mission and Vision Statement for the new institution states:

"We are committed to building a university that is academically excellent, critically engaged and demographically representative out of a regional system shaped, divided and disadvantaged by apartheid. The creation of a new institution is seen as an exciting opportunity that will allow the region to bring into being a genuinely South African university with a new culture and form, designed to meet the challenges of serving the country and the region in innovative and effective ways. This socially responsive institution will be a world-class institution and an active global player while still serving the KwaZulu-Natal and southern African region."

The new institution will continue to offer existing programmes under existing academic rules until these are amended or restructured by the new Council. This means that the existing programmes at both institutions will be offered to new students in 2004 on the same basis as they are offered at present. There will be some instances where offerings are modified by agreement between the two universities, but in these cases you will be informed of such modifications before the commencement of your studies in 2004.

It is probable that the current organization of faculties and schools will change in 2004, but all the various disciplines that constitute these faculties and schools at present will still exist. Some programmes may relocate to another campus during 2005.

What does this actually mean to you?

- That the new university is committed to ensuring excellent academic standards;
- That you will be able to obtain your degree in whichever programme of study currently on offer for which you register;
- That the new University rates students' interests of major importance and will ensure that any changes to your programme of study will be made in the interests of educational quality.

Note: The University reserves the right from time to time to add to, withdraw or amend in any manner, its rules, and any such additions, withdrawals or amendments shall become binding upon the date of publication or upon such date as may be specified by the Senate and the Council.
