EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING PROGRAMME

ANC REPATRIATION COMMITTEE

1 September 1992

BACKGROUND

The integration and resettlement programmes were set up in 1991 to alleviate socio economic hardships faced by returning exiles and political prisoners on release. The programme focuses on preparing these people for economic integration into South Africa. In the past two years since the programme inception these achievements have been made:

Vocational and skills training

- 80 people have been trained in legal, executive and general secretarial courses
- 240 people have trained in accountancy, bookkeeping, public relations, personnel training
- 225 people received training in business and commercial fields.
- 487 young adults were trained in various technical and vocational skills, motor mechanics, welding, carpentry, electrical wiring, dressmaking and designing, truck driving T.V. and video repair, upholstery, shoe repair etc.

1. Training support

- 187 people received training support in the duration of their training programmes

2. Education support

- 192 students were put on education bridging programmes
- 2 008 students have been assisted with bursaries at university and Technikon level

3. Employment support

- 427 people have been assisted with job placements, 2 000 with preparation of C.V.s'
- 30 people received training attachments
- 22 were placed on temporary employment

4. Self-employment programmes

14 people were assisted in self employment schemes

About 3 926 people have benefitted from these programmes

INTRODUCTION

The project is made of four complimentary programmes.

1. Skill training programme
2. Training support
3. Employment programme
4. Self-employment

The employment and training programme is inspired by an integrated approach in meeting the needs of resettlement and integration of exiles. It believes that all programmes must ultimately lead to the economic integration of returning exiles. That economic integration is fundamental in any resettlement and integration programme.

Most exiles have lost their schooling time in the struggle against apartheid. Some have suffered as a result of the education crisis in the country. Consequently integration in society means arming them with marketable skills or helping them to advance their careers.

It also means a deliberate effort to advance people in career paths previously monopolised by whites because of apartheid policies. Without this emphasis we will not be able to redress apartheid imbalances in a democratic South Africa.

Political discrimination and prejudices are a reality in the job market. Employment opportunities will not only be realised through the opening of the job market. Self-employment schemes is an important component of this programme.

Most integration and resettlement programmes end with the training and equipping of people with skills. In the highly competitive job market it is imperative to assist returnees to find employment. The employment project is an active proponent of affirmative action to redress apartheid imbalances in job opportunities. Therefore, the programme will have to rely also on the political clout of political organisations in dealing with this question.

This perspective immediately sets the programme on a different plain with already existing employment schemes. The activities of the Employment and Training Programme are not only inspired by the notion of the marketing of skills, but by the belief in affirmative action to empower of the lot of disadvantaged communities, which among them are political exiles and ex-political prisoners.

The programme prepares candidates for the job market and at the same time wishes to make a break with the confines of apartheid career paths for black people. The programme aims to break the white monopoly of professional skills on the job market through its training programmes. The programme is also committed to the advancement of women, and in particular black women in business, social and political life in South Africa.

Collaboration with other groups

To achieve its aims the programme must collaborate with bursary and education institutions, the business community, and other development groups. The project has also to liaise with a range of social, political and professional organisations. Although realised under the ANC repatriation committee, the programme is sensitive to the fact that returning exiles are not only ANC members.

Among groups that we are involved with are Matla Trust, World University service, Batlagae Trust, employment agencies, South African Education Trust, Education Development Trust, Peninsula Technikon, National Coordinating Committee for the Return of political exiles, Wits Technikon, Youth Education Trust, the private sector and embassies.

We have had dependable collaboration with all these groups for the success of the programme.

PROJECT MOTIVATION

The struggle against apartheid and the crisis in the educational system in the country denied a lot of young people a right to education and to acquire skills. Exiles who have been out of the country for a long time need support to orientate themselves. Active intervention in housing, employment, education and training will bring the much needed relief to help the exiles.

In the education field exiles have peculiar problems like the conversion of educational certificates into South African equivalents. Changing into real names and finding educational institutions in career paths which were traditionally not encouraged for blacks.

The structure of society is still racist which still reproduce racist attitude with regard to employment especially in technical and professional fields. There is a need to prepare exiles to be competitive on the job market to challenge the racist stereotypes characterising job placements.

The limited employment capacity of the economy including prevalent racism and political discrimination makes it necessary to also set up exiles in the informal sector of the economy. Self-employment schemes are a support basis for such a service.

Payments will be made on the basis of invoices from contracted groups and in accordance with the training proposal.

The programme coordinator will advise the Projects Committee as to when such payments are due.

Payments will be made by transfers of through cheques or any other methods jointly agreed upon with training group

In most cases a deposit will be placed with training groups and the balance paid at the completion of the training

Technicons and technical colleges will be funded through bursary applications

Bursary support will be jointly administered through Batlagae trust which handles returnees bursary support

Monitoring of the training

The project coordinator and training officer will monitor the training programmes and give evaluations to the Projects Committee on a regular basis.

Where a programme is conducted in collaboration with another group, joint monitoring and evaluation will be conducted

Joint task forces will be formed to facilitate such collaboration
Will make recommendations to the trust about termination of contracts and opening of new contracts.

2. Training support

Training support will be considered on individual basis for inservice training where the contractor will not be able to advance training support for trainees. The period of support will not exceed five calendar months from the date of the commencement of the training.

Cases to be considered

- Where proposed training dislocates people from their regions
- Where a trainee can not at all undertake the proposed training for financial reasons
- Where and when training absolutely requires such support

How will training support be determined

The support will be considered on presentation by the coordinator to the Committee.

The support will be determined by reasonable needs associated with the training, and calculated according to what can be reasonable needs in a region except in cases where such support will be refunded.

Such support will be tenable for purely skills training purposes. Such support will be negotiated to be administered by the training group on agreed terms

It will be used in conjunction with the skills training fund.

Applicants will get brochures which explain rules governing such support.

Certain skills training courses are geared for self-employment. Candidates on such courses will automatically qualify for such assistance.

Candidates will attend a workshop to learn basic principles of managing own business.

They will learn how to draw business proposals from the workshop.

Candidates will each receive individual counselling on the viability of chosen self employment scheme.

Self-employment programmes will be coordinated by the employment office.

The employment office will monitor the progress of such schemes.

4. Employment Project

Exiles and ex-political prisoners are the most disadvantaged of the unemployed. They still discrimination for political reasons. The project targets the business world to highlight the plight of the returnees. It also maintains contacts with wide a range of employment agencies and NGO's to facilitate this work.

The project operates on a national basis through ANC and NCCR offices to maintain contact with various regions. This network makes it possible to handle placement on a national basis though with shortcomings. Through the skills training project it has been possible to equip people with skills to meet job requirements.

The employment project gets a turnover of skills from the artisans, management, secretarial, business and academic programmes.
