MRS. LIONEL RICHIE

Zulu Chief Honored
At Washington, D.C. Fete

Mongotha Gatsha Buthelezi is one African that Americaâ\200\231s masses donâ\200\231t recognize. Hardly ever publicized or featured in the news media, the Zulu chief, nevertheless, is South Africaâ\200\231s most powerful Black. Not only does he lead his own nation of five million Zulus, he is also the head of the National Cultural Liberation Movement, a 350,000 member organization that is considered the countryâ\200\231s largest freedom effort.

Carryi %hxs handcarved stick, the symbol of his tribal leadership, Chief Buthelezi visited Washington, D.C., to be honored as one of the two recipients of the 1982 George Meany Human Rights Awards. The other awardee was Lech Walesa, the Polish civil rights leader who has been jailed for almost a year. -

The Black African is considered Africaâ\200\231s Dr. Martin Luther King, but that definition is not one that he appreciates in his homeland. He is South Africaâ\200\231s own symbol of non-violence.

In an emotional introduction, Intâ\200\231l Federation of Labor President Lane Kirkland called the chief minister of Kwa Zulu, his tribal state, â\200\234the single most potent force in resisting the onward rush of apartheid.â\200\235

Yet, in his speech, Chief Buthelezi had news for those leaders who demand a boycott of South Africa and continued U.S. isola-

Chief Buthelezi (c) is welcomed to Washington by Mayor Marion Barry (1) and Lane Kirkland.

Former AID Aide To Run
24 West African Missions

A former summer intern at the Agency for International Development in Washington has been named to head AID's economic development projects in 24 West African missions and field offices.

Laurance W. Bond was sworn in at the State Dept. for the position that is considered critical to Africa's progress.

A native of Beloit, Wis., who graduated from the University of California and earned an MBA at the Harvard Business School, Bond joined AID in the summer of 1970 as an intern in the African bureau. Subsequently he was assigned to positions in Africa and Asia.

tion of the racist nation.

He maintained that conditions should accompany funding for South Africa, including equal pay to Black workers for equal participation in settling labor problems. He stresses that South African Blacks could use consumer boycotts to force an end to apartheid.
