Check the arms wish list again

SIR â\200\224 The report, Lekota proposes R2bn defence budget increase (September 10), that Defence Minister Mositoa Lekota wants an additonal R2bn 1s sad but not surprising.

After all, the arms deal has benefited the navy and the air force and done very little for :!he army. And it is the army that is doing something, particularly in (enmo{gucekeeplng.

. The thought that peacekeeping could be a significant role for the South African National Defence . Force Is only a couple of years old.

I am totally unconvinced by the ministerâ\200\231s argument that an iIncrease Is justified because we allocate 1,6% of our gross domestic product (GDP) to defence, whereas other countries in the reglon average about 2%.

Given the size of our GDP compared with those of our nelghbours, 1,6% still allows us to

MOSIUOA LEKOTA

outgun the rest of Southern African Development Community combined. ;

A simllar case Is Japan, where the military is restricted to 1% of GDR Given the size of Japanâ\200\231s GDB, this means that it is the worldâ\200\231s fourth-largest military spender.

On the other hand, 1 totally agree with this view that the decision whether or not to increase military spending needs to be made on â\200\234the basis of reality and what the country needsâ\200\235.

â\200\230Thia was never done hefore the 1999 arms deal was signed, The wish list of arms proposed in the 1996 part of the white paper on de- fence, which became the 1889 arms package, was just a list of things that the military would rather like to have.

1 suspect they were bowled over

. when the cablnet accepted it.

Before we allocate anything more to the military, 1 propose a very careful study of our defence needs. That way we might avold using scarce resources for unnecessary purposes.

This study, incidentally, must include experts from outside the military and the arms industry

NNP accuses IFP of confusing voters
by entering a coalitionwithDA

THE New National Party (NNP) yesterday accused the Inkatha Freedom Party (IFP) of confusing voters by entering a coalition with the Democratic Alliance (DA) while serving in the African National Congress (ANC) government. â\200\234The coalition continuously seeks to â\200\230keep the ANC outâ\200\231 â\200\224 yet the IFP is in government â\200\230with the ANC. In other words the DA has formed an alliance with a party that is part of the very same government it attacks on a daily basis,â\200\235 said the NNP. Business Day Reporter
