In line with this process it has

As announced by Foreign Minister Alfred Nzo during his budget vote debate in Parliament in May, the Department of Foreign Affairs is undergoing a process of rationalisation and reallocation of its resources.

been decided to close the South African Consulates-General in While the closures are regretted, the South African Embassy in Bonn, which will relocate to Berlin in the year 2000, and the ConsulateâGeneral in Munich, will continue to promote and protect South Africa's interests in Germany, including the areas previously served by the ConsulatesâGeneral in Hamburg and Frankfurt. The closures will not, therefore, affect the excellent state of relations between the two countries.

it was no: enovfâ\200\234: for tha-

Sh: said the Mozambican gcwermxent should have taken the initiative and imited others. such as the South African and Malawian authorities, to collaborate. rather than the other way round.

Her husband and most of the other crash victims were Mozambican, who had been on a mission for the A-Mozambican 3rd te. she pointed out

She said she had no doubt that her husband had been murdered, and confirmed that the TRC investigations centered on the planting of a pirate radio beacon (VOR') that allegedly lured the presidential aircraft away from its correct flight path.

Machel said the inquiry so far showed that a technologically advanced VOR "was manufactured in South Africa. and used to divert the plane".

But she also thought it likely there had been Malawian and Mozambican collaboration in the apartheid government's 92112 gend conspiracy against her husband. She mentioned former South African L2adez Hastings Band? and two unnamed Mozambican generals as possibly being implicated. -- Star Foreign Service release. Where were the concerns for the sovereignty of the Zambian government then?

I believe we should all be worried when our government has the temerity to intervene on behalf of a foreigner and then balk at doing the same for a South African. Thabo Mbeki's policy of noninterference is gormless, hypocritical and deeply immoral. However, he is a wise man, and wise people do sometimes change their minds. I hope this happens soon for the sake of all those South Africans languishing in foreign prisons. â\200\224 isztutuzeli Nyoï-\201n Sandton

We ï-\201ght for Kaunda, but abandon McBride

I watched, again, the timely intervention of the same government and the British public in the Louise Woodward affair. I have no doubt in my mind their support ensured that this young woman got on with the minimum sensible sentence. Again the relations between the United States and Britain were not at all affected. The '3: of such actions is indeed long.

Firstly, if our government is aware that.
. it should move heaven and earth to ensure that the Mozambican 9311cÂ»: get the evidence that supports this assertion. Secondly, pressure on the Mozambicans to charge McBride or release him would not have been inappropriate. Thirdly, they should ensure that Paula McBride gets all the moral support she deserves and not try to thwart her efforts to free her husband.

The relationship between a government and its nationals is not dissimilar to that between a parent and a child. Each party should, at all times be able to count on the other's support. It is a relationship that supersedes everything and is sacred. It is more important than any relationship or ties we have with anybody. Anything short of this then you hate 2:: uni-\201t parent and an uni-\201t government.

he hearty embrace for new Foreign Affairs boss Jackie Selebi at the presidential guest house du's week as he returned from Geneva, where he had been the country's ambassador to the United Nations made it plain this was not just another dimorphic.

As an ANC stalwart and former MP, and some one of accomplishment at this last post, he entered Pretoria on an exuberant note. It was also clear Mr Selebi intended to change things in his department, and in the country's foreign policy. His first ambition is expected of a departmental head. It is within his or his jurisdiction. The second, however, is more interesting.

Can it: should a public servant, director-general or not, alter policy? Is this not the function, in democracy's separation of powers, of the country's elected representatives who are directly responsible to the electorate?

It stands to reason that departments do so.
influence policy in the day-to-day running of government. The more skilled. forceful ones: that they do, they be more say they will have in shaping the nation which announced by the minister's last answer to. It seems Mr Selebi is 2.3.1 Of the above.

Lest he meant to say he intended to make a significant contribution to the formulation of foreign policy, to do things in a new way, his message: end of

MEDIA STATEMENT ON THE CLOSURE OF SOUTH AFRICAN CONSULATESâ\200\230GENERAL IN HAMBURG AND FRANKFURT, FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

As announced by Foreign Minister Alfred Nzo during his budget vote debate in Parliament in May, the Department of Foreign Affairs is undergoing a process of rationalisation and reallocation of its resources.
been decided to close the South African Consulates-General in Hamburg and Frankfurt in Germany by the end of 1998.

In line with this process it has

While the closures are regretted, the South African Embassy in Bonn, which will relocate to Berlin in the year 2000, and the Consulate-General in Munich, will continue to promote and protect South Africa's interests in Germany, including the areas previously served by the Consulates-General in Hamburg and Frankfurt. The closures will not, therefore, affect the excellent state of relations between the two countries.
