Re: Article on education.

Dear Sarah and Tony,

I suppose you will be very busy, as usual. I wonder if you have received already any reaction from Joe Adams? It is of course very well possible that people in South Africa these days are busy with other activities than their usual workload.

I am writing in fact on another issue: I am still working myself on the publication on education and in that context I found a very interesting article in Nature in which a reference was made to another article. That article is written by a certain HARTSHORNE. The title of his article is probably "Post-Apartheid Education", an article included in "Critical choices for a South African Society", edited by Oxford University Press, 1989. The article in which the reference was made was a "Commentary" named "Towards the day of hard choices" by Jon File, Annamia van den Heever and Stuart John Saunders in Nature volume 341 - 14 September 1989).

Since the article I am looking for was edited by Oxford University Press, I asked Chris Dammers to trace it for me. But it was impossible for him to find it. He suggested that you might know about the article or that you might know one of the people mentioned here who then could help us in tracing the article. I would like to ask your assistance with this. If however you think it will ask too much work to trace it, please let me know and I forget about it.

Thanking you very much on beforehand, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

Riet Van Laer.
