to save talks

GOVERNMENT and the ANC have embarked on a joint effort to head off what they perceive as a serious threat to a negotiated settlement, following Inkatha's announcement yesterday time it. wvuid not attend any further multiparty talks until its demand for a veto was met.

An Inkatha memorandum delivered to the negatlatlna council yester ay said: 'We hereby confirm that we will not attend any further meetings of the negotiating council or its structures until there is a satisfactory calling 3 sufficient commune decisions in the face of considerable opposition." '

It added that Inkatha would not accept any definition of Sufficient consensus if "major players such as government, the NP, the ANC alliance and the Inkatha. KwaZulu government groupings" were unable to accept the ruling.

Cyril Ramaphosa were not present at the negotiating council for the day. They met behind closed doors to discuss solution at Deputy Constitutional Development Minister Fanie Schoeman said Inkatha was demanding a veto right. It was "moving the goal post" and hiding behind procedural issues as pretext for not participating. --, -.....-....., 7

He said the latest Inkatha move was a threat to the legitimacy of the negotiation process. and all parties were lacking for ways to accommodate their demands and bring them back into the process.

If the ANC is to meet Inkatha tomorrow in about negotiating a settlement must be present if they want to influence the constitution said Sciuetuan.

He said Inkatha initially demanded federal principles in the constitution, and now that the new dispensation was clearly federal "they move the goalposts again".

"They are just looking for a reason not to participate in negotiations." Schoeman said. He pointed out what he described as a contradiction in the memorandum where Inkatha states that it is committed to negotiation to the problem of said that while they were prepared to go a long way to meet Inkatha. there would be a time when they could no longer meet demands which were constantly changed as earlier demands were met.

Inkatha's memorandum said the resolution instructing the technical committee to draw up a draft constitution for discussion by the negotiating council did not meet its requirements and it therefore rejected the draft that was made available confidentially to parties yesterday. i

Inkatha said it had reserved its position on the resolution on June 30 because it felt the instructions did not adequately reflect the gains made in two caucus meetings between itself and government and between Cosag and government.

Schoeman said the test of whether the committee had been correctly instructed would be to look at its draft "Instead they (Inkatha) are prejudging the whole thing before seeing one single word of what the technical committee has produced."

Inkatha's latest decision is a shift from its previous position stated as recently as Monday's meeting as soon as the draft constitution was tabled for discussion

"We cannot understand or accept that they will be absent when this constitution will be debated. Any party that is 82:19" constitution chapter by chapter Starting on Monday. If Inkatha was not present through this process it would not be able to have its views included in the constitution. He said it seemed Inkatha wanted to wait until the interim constitution had been finalised and then reject it, claiming it had not been part of the process.

Conferences

Some 300 business people, the cream of South Africa's financial crop, were invited by Trevor Manuel, Minister of Finance, to concentrate their efforts on new financial instruments for development.

A series of investment conferences in September/October this year to coincide with the 48th Annual Meeting of the World Bank, is being targeted to sell South Africa overseas.

Investment drive. ...
Sceptical businessmen say that the delay in the easing of sanctions was a setback: an attempt by the ANC, which had belatedly realized that investment was in the offing.
Said one American: "By the way, US companies will be eager to get their portfolios in South Africa unless there is concern amongst the ANC about the union movement and the churches' role. The flag unions, none is just going to come into South Africa. No warmth; want to participate in its workers.

"We also question the allocation of pensions if money can go apart from JSE- listed funds. A lot of money is going that route because of the high returns, but it's to do nothing for the country.
"It is unbalanced, but it can be prepared to do it for blacks. This only on a commercial basis with dividend payback after 15 years."

"On the other hand, the commitment to the 100th percent development and South Africa is a stepping-stone for the rest of Africa. If there is money, we could barter." The American Chamber of Commerce's Mthembu Cohen at companies are holding back because they're afraid they will come in at the politically incorrect time. They'll meet
